SKILLS AUDIT

This skills audit has been designed both to help you to identify your strengths, weaknesses and areas for development within various skills areas and to work out how your group will operate.

If you find there are some areas in which you need support, there is a range of provision available at the University to help you e.g. <a href="http://library.northumbria.ac.uk/develop-learning-skills/learn

How to complete this audit – each member of the group individually

Part 1 - Key Skills

Read the SKILLS AREA, place a tick in the column that best suits your ability and then in the final column decide the priority for YOU in the development of this skill.

If you have skills that are marked as 'I can't do this' or OK but I need more practice' AND are identified as 'very important' or 'quite important' then they are skills you should focus on gaining or improving.

Some of these skills are about study in general and could be useful to keep for future reference as you develop your skills. Some are more directly relevant to this module (such as working in groups) and should be a good way for you to decide how you will set up your group.

Part 2 Technical Skills

This area has been left deliberately blank to allow you and your group to think of skills that are specifically relevant to your course or pathway. AS a group agree a list of skills then complete in the same way as part A.

How to use this audit

- Compare the results with the rest of your group. You can use it to identify roles that you could fulfil within the group or tasks that you may be able to perform. For example, if you have someone in your group who professes to having strong writing skills, use this to your group's advantage. If you have someone who is strong at organizing groups, they might work best as a group leader or chair.
- For the technical skills, identify where your group's strengths lie and where there are obvious gaps.
- If there are skill gaps in your group you may find that these roles and tasks are better shared within the group rather than giving to some poor unfortunate person to struggle with.
- As mentioned above, you can use this audit as an individual to help you develop personally both at University and in the future. Many of these skills will be equally relevant when you are working.
- Using this skills audit may help to improve your CV if you already have one, or form the basis for one if you have not yet created one.
- In this module you will later be asked to reflect on your group and individual performance. This should be helpful as a starting point.
